PLOT OVERVIEW

The plot works in this way:--

- The various state police forces have been alerted to Tye Whitaker being a wanted man because the villains are so highly placed that they organized this without being questioned. Later, questions will be asked (viz. the two journalists) allowing the desired outcome in the conclusion.
- Jared has Hoy Stewart and Max Strudwick at his disposal so long as he pretends that the rescue of his future brother-in-law is in some way connected to the diamond rort (on which he is working with Max). Jared is able to ask Hoy and/or Max to follow up leads for him.
- Jared takes on the responsibility for collecting Tye Whitaker from a certain Darwin landmark. From there Jared will transport Tye to his (Jared's) home where he will be hidden away. The two men undertake a gruelling 4000 kilometre drive from Darwin to Eagleby. They have to make it through two police roadblocks where a "shoot-to-kill" edict has been ordered upon Tye.
- We hear the story of Tye's durance either by seeing it as scenes or via Tye's telling the story to Jared (with visuals).
- The villains will organize and execute a counter-attack regarding Tye's freedom from their clutches.

- Tye has developed a special talent: he is able to leave his own consciousness and become a Roman legionary (in his imagination, of course). This helps him overcome his captors. We (the audience) will venture into Tye's world as Scipio Australis. Some of the plot (for example, the diamond rort) will be covered in these Roman scenes instead of clogging up the actual story that is occurring in current time.
- Both Jared and Tye fall in love: Jared with Sammie and Tye with Casey. There will be an engagement party where Jared's boss (Paul Classon) turns up. The unravelling of the villains' organization will now take place.
